GIRARD AND THE FUTURE

STEPHEN GIRARD'S concern for his fellow men and his interest in their problems and needs did not die with him. He painstakingly arranged that the benevolences which had claimed his interest in life should not suffer interruption by his passing. Among other bequests, his will provided for a substantial sum to be expended annually for the improvement of the river front and port of Philadelphia, a project which had always been close to his heart.

A kindred spirit animates this bank. Transcending the span of individual lives, it has continued without interruption since Girard's day to serve the larger needs of its fellow men, a record of permanence worth considering when you select a Philadelphia correspondent.
